Name: SHASHWAT KUMAR
Registration number: RA2511003011035
Date: 12 Nov 2026

21LEM202T — Unit 4, Session 6, SLO 1

Part A — Key Ideas (Recap)

• Value of a unit is its participation in the larger order (a larger, harmonious system). E.g. the value of a pen is that it helps to write (participation in education); the value of water is that it quenches thirst (participation in health).

• Similarly, your value in the family / society / nature / existence is your participation in the harmony there; your value in existence is your participation in the co-existence.

• Program of Action (Individual): (1) Self-exploration – verify the proposals on your own right → right understanding → feeling & thought of harmony → harmonious behaviour, work and participation; (2) Self-awareness – be aware of your desire, thought and expectation every moment; (3) Self-evaluation – evaluate them on the basis of your natural acceptance.

• Purification of Sanskar: Sanskar = acceptances derived from Σ[desire + thought + expectation] over all time + acceptances born out of right understanding. Sanskar(t+1) = Sanskar(t) + Environment(t) + Self-exploration(t).

• Program of Action (Society): (1) People's Education Program (for adults); (2) Education-Sanskar Program (for children); (3) Undivided Society / Universal Human Order Program – fulfilment of the human goal: right understanding & right feeling (every individual) → prosperity (every family) → fearlessness/trust (society) → co-existence (nature/existence).

• Meditation / paying attention = focusing on a reality to see it as it is (5 aspects: form, property, natural characteristic, innateness, co-existence). If the object of attention is within (B1), it can lead to contemplation, understanding and realisation; if it is outside or at B2, it gives no significant result, however elaborate the method.

• It is the object of focus that is significant, not just the method of concentration. Paying attention to your Self makes you aware of your desire/thought/expectation and of your natural acceptance – meditation, every moment, is living with awareness of reality as it is.

• Living in the Present – regret of past, fear of future, opposition to present. Living in the Ever Present – evaluating the past on the basis of co-existence (no regret), planning the future on the basis of co-existence (fearlessness), living now on the basis of co-existence (mutual fulfilment with units).

• Sum-up: existence is co-existence and is ever present; synergy and harmony are inherent – we do not have to create it; the human role is to realise it and live accordingly.

This section is a recap of key ideas; no blanks or questions to fill. The student is expected to read and understand the content.

Part B — In-Class Activity

Activity 1: For each unit, write its value, i.e. its participation in the larger order.

Unit	Its value = participation in...
Pen	writing
Water	sustaining life
Your body	performing actions in harmony with self and nature
You, in the family	fulfilling relationships and responsibilities
You, in existence	contributing to the harmony of the whole

Activity 2: Write two of your own recent desires/thoughts/expectations and evaluate each on the basis of your natural acceptance.

Desire / Thought / Expectation	On the basis of natural acceptance, is it acceptable?
1. I wanted to buy a new phone because my current one is old	No, because it is driven by social comparison, not genuine need
2. I thought I should help my friend with their project	Yes, because it aligns with my natural feeling of care and mutual support

Activity 3: Rewrite each item on the basis of co-existence (as in "Living in the Ever Present").

Living in the Present	On the basis of co-existence becomes...
Regret of the past	Learning from the past without attachment
Fear of the future	Preparedness and trust in the present
Opposition to the present	Acceptance and constructive engagement with what is

Part C — Long-Answer Questions

1. Define "value" as used in this course, and illustrate it with two examples at different levels (e.g. a physical unit and yourself at one level of being). (5 marks)

Value in this course means the participation of a unit in the larger order — its role in maintaining harmony. For example, a pen has value in that it participates in the larger order by enabling writing and communication. At the level of myself in the family, my value is my participation in fulfilling relationships and responsibilities, contributing to the family's harmony.

2. Describe the three-step Program of Action for the individual – self-exploration, self-awareness and self-evaluation. (5 marks)

The three-step Program of Action for the individual is: (1) Self-exploration — questioning and examining one's desires, thoughts, and expectations to understand their source. (2) Self-awareness — becoming conscious of one's natural acceptance and the difference between what is truly fulfilling and what is merely desired. (3) Self-evaluation — judging each desire/thought/expectation against natural acceptance to decide whether it is acceptable or needs to be transformed.

3. What is meditation / paying attention, and how does focusing within (B1) differ in result from focusing outside (B2)? (5 marks)

Meditation or paying attention is the practice of directing one's awareness deliberately. Focusing within (B1) means attending to one's own thoughts, feelings, and natural acceptance, leading to self-understanding and clarity. Focusing outside (B2) means attending to external objects, events, or people, which can lead to distraction, attachment, or reaction. The result of B1 is inner harmony and right understanding, while B2 often reinforces conditioned desires and expectations.

4. Using one situation from your own life, distinguish "living in the present" from "living in the ever present." (5 marks)

When I was preparing for an exam, living in the present meant I was fully focused on studying each topic without worrying about the result. Living in the ever present, however, would mean I also recognized that my effort is part of a larger harmony — I am not just studying for a grade, but participating in my own growth and contributing to the order of existence. The former is task-focused, the latter is relationship-focused with the whole.

Self-Reflection (Take-Home)

• Identify one sanskar (acceptance) of yours – is it born of accumulated desire/thought/expectation, or of right understanding?

• Through one ordinary moment today, practise "paying attention to your Self" – what desire/thought/expectation did you notice?

• What is one thing you would choose to participate in (value) at the level of family or society this week?

• One sanskar of mine is the acceptance that I must always be busy to be worthy — this is born of accumulated desire/thought/expectation from social conditioning, not right understanding.

• While washing dishes, I noticed a thought: "I wish I were doing something more productive." This expectation of constant productivity was a desire to avoid the present moment.

• This week, I would choose to participate in my family by listening attentively to my parents without distraction, contributing to harmony at the family level.