Activity 1: For each value, verify whether it is naturally acceptable and write one observation.

Human value	Naturally acceptable?	Observation when I live with it
Happiness / peace / satisfaction	Yes	I feel content and calm within myself.
Self-regulation	Yes	I am able to manage my impulses and focus on my goals.
Trust and respect	Yes	I build stronger and more honest relationships with others.

Co-existence	Yes	I feel connected to nature and other beings, living in harmony.

Activity 2: Use one situation from student life, family, campus or profession.

Situation	Human value involved	Policy: how to act	Character evidence
A classmate asks to copy my homework.	Justice and trust	I politely refuse and offer to explain the concept instead.	I consistently help others learn without giving them the answers.
Check: self-satisfying?	Check: people-friendly?	Check: eco-friendly?	Final guideline
Yes, I feel good about being honest and helpful.	Yes, my classmate learns and respects my integrity.	Yes, no paper or resources are wasted.	Ethical conduct is self-satisfying, people-friendly, and eco-friendly.

Activity 3 – Rewrite Indefinite Conduct

Rewrite each example in the direction of ethical human conduct.

Indefinite conduct	Ethical alternative
Competition / opposition	Cooperation / mutual enrichment
Domination / exploitation	Nurturing / service
Maximising my gain only	Maximising mutual benefit
Confusion between temporary excitement and continuous happiness	Clarity that continuous happiness comes from right understanding and fulfilment

Part C — Long-Answer Questions

1. Explain how human values are naturally acceptable and definite. (5 marks)

Human values are naturally acceptable because every human being, on self-verification, finds that values like trust, respect, and harmony resonate with their innate natural acceptance — they are not imposed from outside. They are definite because they are based on the universal human goal of happiness and prosperity for all, and can be clearly understood through right understanding of relationships and coexistence. For example, trust is naturally acceptable to everyone as a basis for fulfilling relationships, and its meaning is definite — it is the assurance that the other person intends my happiness and prosperity.

2. How do value, policy and character help in understanding ethical human conduct? (5 marks)

Value refers to the naturally acceptable principles (e.g., trust, respect) that guide right understanding. Policy is the set of rules or guidelines we adopt in specific situations to implement those values. Character is the consistent practice of those values and policies in daily life. Together, they form a complete framework: values provide the foundation, policy translates them into actionable conduct, and character ensures sustained ethical behaviour, making ethical human conduct both clear and practical.

3. Why is ethical human conduct called self-satisfying, people-friendly and eco-friendly? (5 marks)

Ethical human conduct is self-satisfying because it aligns with our natural acceptance, leading to inner peace and fulfilment without contradiction. It is people-friendly because it fosters trust, respect, and mutual prosperity in relationships, creating harmony in society. It is eco-friendly because it respects the natural order and promotes sustainable use of resources, ensuring the well-being of all living beings and the environment.

4. Analyse one ethical situation and state a definite guideline for conduct. (5 marks)

Situation: A shopkeeper sells goods at a higher price to a customer who is unaware of the market rate. Analysis: The shopkeeper's natural acceptance would tell him that exploiting the customer's ignorance is wrong, as it violates trust and mutual benefit. Definite guideline: Always transact with transparency and fairness, ensuring that both parties gain — the customer gets fair value and the shopkeeper earns a reasonable profit without deception.

Self-Reflection (Take-Home)

Which value did you verify most clearly as naturally acceptable?

Where do you still find contradiction between temporary gain and right conduct?

What one guideline will you follow in behaviour, work or participation?

The value I verified most clearly as naturally acceptable is trust — I feel that trusting and being trustworthy brings inner peace and strengthens relationships. I still find contradiction when I am tempted to take a shortcut for immediate profit, knowing that the right conduct would be to be honest and patient. The one guideline I will follow is: Before any action, ask myself if it is mutually beneficial and respectful to all involved.
